

What is Your Education & Career Table?

Overview

This question suggests that you need to prepare through education and consider a career in a certain field. This is an obvious question to gauge individual interest. Everyone should be of the mindset that what you do beyond high school graduation will need preparation through education. Some people do not know this because they are not always encouraged to pursue college, but it is a more obvious strategy today considering college is accessible to everyone.

No, this question suggests what is important to you regarding the romantic partner you choose. If education does not matter to the prospective partner, then that is something you both should discuss at the table. However, if you believe education is important to you, then this is something you must discuss especially if you have completed one or more degrees and this fact may be a hindrance for a romantic partner who only completed a high school diploma. Provided the partner does not care about education, then the relationship can go forward. However, if the partner is jealous of your education accomplishments, then the relationship cannot go forward.

This situation becomes even more complicated when you are successful in your career. Unless the partner is satisfied with their career/non-career/small business choices, then expect the romantic relationship to have its challenges. It is hard for two people to live in peace with each other when they have not found peace within themselves, individually. Determine what is important to you and seek someone who is compatible with those interests.

Is education important to you?

Is having a career important to you?

Are you willing to give up either option if your romantic partner becomes jealous?

What would be your alternative?